

Carlyle was for many years on terms of closest friendship with John Stuart Mill, John Sterling, and Robert Browning. The letters to Mill, nearly eighty in number, fill more than half the volume. The letters to John Sterling, whom Carlyle met through Mill and whose biography he afterward wrote, are thirty-three in number. The letters to Browning are not many, for the poet lived within easy reach of Cheyne Row. THIS TITLE IS CITED AND RECOMMENDED BY: Books for College Libraries; Cambridge Bibliography of English Literature; Catalogue of the Lamont Library, Harvard College.
