

Excerpt: ...Which station had we better go to next? The news will be at the farthest before you can reach the nearest, he answered. We shall telegraph to the suburbs first. Then what more is there we can do? asked Percivale. Nothing, said the inspector,-except you find out whether any of the neighbors saw her, and when and where. It would be something to know in what direction she was going. Have you any ground for suspicion? Have you ever discharged a servant? Were any tramps seen about the place? I know, who it is! I cried. Its the woman that took Theodora! Its Theodoras mother! I know it is! Percivale explained what I meant. Thats what people get, you see, when they take on themselves other peoples business, returned the inspector. That child ought to have been sent to the workhouse. He laid his head on his hand for a moment. It seems likely enough, he added. Then after another pause-I have your address. The child shall be brought back to you the moment shes found. We cant mistake her after your description. Where are you going now? I said to my husband, as we left the station to re-enter the cab. I dont know, he answered, except we go home and question all the shops in the neighborhood. Let us go to Miss Clare first, I said. By all means, he answered. We were soon at the entrance of Lime Court. When we turned the corner in the middle of it, we heard the sound of a piano. Shes at home! I cried, with a feeble throb of satisfaction. The fear that she might be out had for the last few moments been uppermost. We entered the house, and ascended the stairs in haste. Not a creature did we meet, except a wicked-looking cat. The top of her head was black, her forehead and face white; and the black and white were shaped so as to look like hair parted over a white forehead, which gave her green eyes a frightfully human look as she crouched in the corner of a window-sill in the light of a gas-lamp outside. But before we...
